Class Secretary

ROY SMITH WALLACE

Class Committee

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT
ROB ROY ALEXANDER
ALBERT GOODHUE

To the Members of the Class of 1904:

These class reports serve as material for statistics about Harvard men, and so this report appears in the form that others have taken. For the Class itself, however, the main function of the report is to keep us informed about one another, and thus help to preserve the integrity of the Class.

This first report records the undergraduate life of the Class as a whole, and of individual members of the Class. Future reports will enlarge the department given to the doings of the men since leaving college — addresses, occupations, marriages, etc. Let me urge every member of the Class to respond promptly and fully to my requests for information; and, more than this, to take the initiative, in sending to me information concerning himself and every other member of the Class. Only by co-operation in this way can a class of over eight hundred men be kept together.

Let me thank those members of the Class who have responded promptly to my letters; they have made this report possible. Our thanks are also due, and are tendered, to the Rev. Prof. William Wallace Fenn, for his courtesy in supplying a correct version of the Baccalaureate Sermon; to the editors of the Harvard Crimson and Advocate for the use of their files; to the secretaries of clubs; and to those graduates and undergraduates who have assisted in the preparation of this report.

Sincerely yours,

ROY SMITH WALLACE

THE POWERS OF THE AGE TO COME

BY REV. WILLIAM WALLACE FENN

The powers of the age to come. — HEBREW vi, 5

WHAT does the author mean by this striking phrase, the powers of the age to come? Scholars seem to be uncertain, and indeed it may be doubted whether the author himself could have defined his own meaning with accuracy and precision. Probably he was thinking vaguely of superhuman celestial agencies already active in the world and destined to become more fully and manifestly operative after the initial triumphs of the Messianic age, but the very indefiniteness of the phrase has fascinated the religious imagination which, from time to time, has conceived of interpretations, truer, it may be, to the author's spirit than to his formal thought. To approach these higher and more profitable suggestions of the text, let us start with an idea quite foreign to the author's intention, but pointing the way to a larger apprehension.

What are to be the physical powers of the age to come? No one is wise enough to foretell, and few are rash enough to guess. Could any one a century ago have predicted the powers of the age that now is? Still less is even the most farsighted among us competent to divine the powers of the next age. At the opening of the last century, water power was a valuable asset here in New England: on the banks of large and rapid streams mills and factories were built and cities were founded. Soon, however, the steam-engine supplanted the water wheel, and the earlier "white coal" became of much less importance and value. The nineteenth century is sometimes referred to as the age of steam, and it is confidently asserted that we have now entered upon a new age, that of electricity. With the introduction and improvement of electrical appliances, however, the recently undervalued water power is again becoming precious. Manifestly, however, neither of these changes could have been long anticipated, even by the shrewdest observer, so hazardous is it for one age to attempt to forecast the powers of the next.

Notwithstanding our ignorance, however, of two things we may be reasonably certain. The first is that the next age will control vastly more power than the present age has mastered. Man has learned the great art of manufacturing power which, as has been recently argued, marks a new epoch in the progress of civilization, and thus he has become potential master of practically infinite resources. Not only by the invention and application of more economical methods of employing forces already known, but also by the discovery of other forms of energy hidden now in the vast laboratory of nature and giving but fitful and tantalizing glimpses of their presence, will the men of the age to come have under their control power indefinitely surpassing that which is at our command. This is the first point on which we may be confident, the enormous increase of usable power in the coming age.

And the second is, that then, as now, the most significant form of power will be human intelligence. In fact, the fulfilment of the prediction as to the greater utilization of physical power depends wholly upon the increase of human knowledge and intelligence. As a schoolboy with a borrowed lens focuses the rays of the sun to burn his hand or ignite a scrap of paper, so man in his larger and more serious way is learning to concentrate the diffused power of nature to a point of efficiency. He is not creating power, he is contriving to make it efficient for his ends. Whatever increment of power the next age will bring, it will certainly be due to enlarged knowledge and intelligence. And this advance in intelligence cannot be limited to the few, but must be generally shared, for the displacement of animate by inanimate power calls for more intelligent oversight and guidance. A horse can often find its own way and care for itself, but an automobile can do neither. And for the utilization of physical forces elaborate and delicate machinery is required, which demands intelligence for its production and manipulation. Chief among the powers of the age to come, then, will be human intelligence.

Animated, therefore, by the hope, based upon experience and rational foresight, of man's indefinite possibilities in the control of physical power, we realize more keenly than ever before the necessity of educating the mind of man, not only by imparting the indispensable knowledge but also by training the mind itself, that it may work accurately and constructively. The more clearly we recognize the existence of incalculable power, now unused, but which can and must be harnessed to serve the purposes of man, the more clearly we discern the worth of education by which alone man is enabled to control the working of these mighty and waiting powers. By the promise of the future we are taught the present necessity of mental discipline. Unlimited power waits upon the education of man.

In this fact lies a partial answer to the question which inevitably rises when we think of the next age with its vast accession of power, and ask whether added efficiency will conduce to individual and social well-being. Will the man of the next age, when more fully emancipated from the necessity of merely physical labor, be a better and happier man? Will the higher elements of his nature have cultivation and exercise, or will they grow sodden by idleness and in disuse? Will he have sufficient delicacy of feeling to reserve general products for general utility, and insist that articles which pertain closely to the individuality of the owner and user shall bear the stamp of individual workmanship, his own so far as possible? As in Browning's poem, Fust, the inventor of the art of printing, muses long and anxiously over the question whether this invention of his will conduce to the weal or the woe of man, since error will fare alike with truth in dissemination and perpetuation. So we often wonder whether the confidently anticipated addition of power will work good or evil to man and to society. But since this increase of power depends upon the growth of human intelligence, there is in this fact some ground, at least, for confidence. This necessary development of intelligence, the habits engendered by dealing with the precise and inflexible laws of physical forces, the heightened sense of responsibility which ultimately accompanies increased possession of power — these considerations, and others, unite to assure us that in the age to come the enormous powers conquered by man will be used in such a way as to promote individual and social welfare.

Yet we cannot be blind to the fact that the lesson may be learned very slowly and only through bitter and disastrous experience. Sudden and great accessions of power are often temporarily fruitful in great abuses on the part of those who have not been trained to the use of power. Charged with unwonted authority, how prone men are to strut and bluster and domineer, regardless of the general welfare! Have we not witnessed pitiable exhibitions of the vulgar insolence of wealth and the brutal bullying of some into whose hands the control of large masses of men has been intrusted, which warn us of perils, real, even though they may be temporary, accompanying the rapid acquisition of power by men who have not been educated to use it well and fairly with an eye to the general good? Few men can safely be endued with power which previous discipline has not qualified them to use; hence as in view of the possibilities of the age to come there is need of mental discipline, that these possibilities may become actual, so is there even greater present need of moral education, that the power won may be well and wisely used. Never has man wielded so much power as is his to-day, but he will control greater power to-morrow; hence never was the establishment of just values and the strengthening of unselfish motives of such supreme importance, both for the age that now is and for that which is to come. The more powerful a man is, the more necessary is it that the ends which he seeks should be worthy. To inspire just interests and righteous desires, to educate those fundamental and directive interests which form the intellectual element in the will of man, in a word to develop human character — can there be any more important task in view of the greater powers of the age to come?

From this point of view character takes on new significance. Moralists have emphasized its value to the individual, and justly, for a man's individual happiness depends more upon possession of a character which wins his own respect and makes possible the higher joys of comradeship and domestic life than upon any other single cause. Character too, is the secret of efficiency. Many a man of exceptional ability has doomed himself by some act of meanness or indulgence to a life of obscurity, and apprehension lest by another's discovery, or by his own disclosure in an unguarded moment, a guilty secret may spring to light. As Jesus said, "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. For every one that doeth ill hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his works should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his works may be made manifest that they have been wrought in God." That so many men live in obscurity and dread not daring to come to the light, lest their meanness and sin should become known, is evidence that our ethical teachers have not been at fault in emphasizing the importance of character to individual happiness and efficiency. But in view of the enhanced power which each individual is to wield, whether for good or evil, and of the closer social connections which make it impossible that any man should live wholly to himself, character becomes of immeasurable worth socially as well as individually. What can be of more importance, then, than the education of will by the purifying of purpose and the fixing of proper values?

How can this be done, if indeed it can be done at all? Into the vexed question whether virtue can be taught we need not enter, since it is universally agreed that in moral education the influence of personality is quite the most influential agency. The consummate teacher of good-will is a man who leads the life of good-will. And this brings us at last to our central thought: in the age to come the powers of man will be enormously increased, and hence the character of the man who controls these powers is of utmost significance not only to himself but to Society as a whole. Hence moral education becomes of supreme moment. But the best agency of moral education is a man of dominant good-will. Hence for a man to lead steadily, unflinchingly, and modestly withal a life of good-will and unselfish purpose is to make almost the largest contribution in his power to the welfare of his own and the succeeding age.

At last we have reached a point at which the deeper suggestions of the text appear. In the age to come, whereof we speak, human intelligence will be one of the chief powers, and if the age is to be, as we believe and hope, one of blessing and not of woe, its dominant all-controlling power will be good-will. Hence to make the coming age more surely and rapidly what it ought to be, and what we desire and mean it shall be, we pledge ourselves to the life of good-will now. And the writer of our text uses the phrase in describing the Christians of his time; they are men, he says, who taste now the powers of the age to come. Is the Christian, then, one who gives himself to the power of the good-will? As simple matter of fact, it was Jesus who announced to the world that good-will, or love, is the supreme law of human life. As we honor Newton and Kepler and Darwin for their discoveries of the laws of nature, so we honor Jesus as the effective discoverer of the truth that good-will is the law of human life. Not that he enacted or promulgated a law any more than Newton ordained the law of gravitation. To discover a law is to reveal a power acting in a certain definite and predictable way; and when Jesus proclaimed love as the law of human life, he announced the fact that the supreme power of humanity and of the world is the power of good-will. In this power Jesus lived, to it he committed himself, and to it he entrusted the future of his work. It is true that Jesus believed himself possessed of exceptional control over supernatural powers, yet the notable fact is that he never invokes this power for his own benefit, and uses it for others only with manifest reluctance, choosing rather to depend upon the powers of truth and love alone. With these he endows his disciples, — "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth, go ye therefore and teach all nations," — winning them by the power of truth. He bade his apostles tarry in Jerusalem until they should be endued with power from on high, and that power was the power of the Holy Spirit. Whatever else the words may mean, it is at least certain that the Holy Spirit is a spirit that is holy, and by the presence and activity of such a spirit in the hearts of his disciples their work was to be accomplished. Again and again has the Christian church fallen away from this its supreme power, seeking to accomplish its ends by physical force, by vile appeals to the baser hopes and fears of men, only to discover, after sorrowful experience, the truth of its Master's word, that power resides not in craft or force but only in justice, friendliness, truth, and good-will. Since, therefore, it was Jesus who discovered and taught the power of good-will, committing himself to it and commending his followers to it alone, those who confide in the same power and obey the same law are truly his disciples and followers — they are Christians in reality.

The course of our thought is typical of the movement of the generation. We did not take Jesus as our guide at the outset, but as we advanced we have reached at last a point where we find him waiting for us. So men all about us are unconsciously moving towards him, and the time is not far distant when we shall be able to lift the ancient word out of the misconceptions and superstitions which have clustered around them, and without explanation or apology summon men to lead consciously and deliberately the Christian life. It ought to be clear that the Christian life is the sort of life in its essential and creative principles that Jesus himself lived — the life of righteousness and unselfish purpose. And to this way of life the needs of the world and our highest ideals persuasively invite us. In present conditions such a life is by no means easy, the temptations to a meaner way are many and strong, and the demand for self-sacrifice is far from obsolete. I would not insult your intelligence by prophesying to you smooth things, or your courage by proposing a soft and easy way. This world in which we are to do our work is not the world of the optimist any more than it is the world of the pessimist; it is a growing world, with evil to be overcome and good to be realized, with foes to fight and friends to win, yet with wondrous possibilities which we have power to make actual in the triumph of truth over error, of light over darkness, of good over evil. Just because the world is not so good as it might be, and as we can help make it, is it a thrilling, inspiring world in which to work. Once a clergyman was lamenting to a brother minister the condition of the city in which he lived, — its poor schools, its civic corruption, its ignorant administration of philanthropy, — and when he had finished his doleful story his friend replied cheerfully: "Well, what a splendid lot of work you have cut out for you!" It was a brave, true word: it is worth while to live in a world where there is so much to be done. And one of the most encouraging signs of the times that young men, educated men, are sincerely asking is how they can best serve the world. We have thought together this afternoon to very little purpose, unless an answer to that inquiry has already appeared. Is it not plain that the secret of the highest usefulness lies not so much in specific tasks as in the personality behind them? It takes a noble, a true, high-souled man to help the world at all, and such a man helps supremely just by being true and pure. The most helpful agency in this world of ours, surpassing everything else in social worth, is a man of good-will and unselfish purpose, who not only blesses the world that now is, but by the contagion of his personality educates the good-will in the hearts of other men, which shall dominate the age to come. Without this good-will a man's best work will fail of its highest value, and with it his very failure will be nobly helpful. There is no service a man can render the world comparable with the service of a high purpose and an unselfish aim.

It is well to remember this in view of the ever-present temptation to achieve immediate and visible results by resorting to means which are ignoble and personally degrading. How seductive the plea is that to accomplish anything a man must ally himself to the powers that now appear strong, even at the sacrifice of his highest ideals! If you would be really useful, pleads an astute worldly-wise counsellor, then forego these sensitive scruples of yours, turn your back upon these absurdly lofty ideals, that you may accomplish something practically useful. Before an appeal like that, men who would have resisted with scorn all baser pleas have ignominiously fallen. But believe me that no outward visible results are worth one moment's consideration in comparison with the importance to the man himself and to the world of spotless integrity, unblemished honor, and an unstained ideal which rallies and encourages all that is noblest in all human souls. Any outward result, however valuable, is dearly purchased at the price of personal dishonor and a debased ideal. Once, according to the New Testament story, Jesus faced that very temptation when before him were unrolled the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, — how much good he might accomplish in a position of such unmeasured influence and power which might become his by yielding to a meaner motive and worshipping a lower ideal! — but the temptation was met by the principle, true to the deepest spirit and law of his life — "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." True to that purpose, he lived and died: what could have appeared more futile and useless than that life so speedily and tragically ended, and yet how it has blessed the world, and how that ideal of his leads the generations on! Taught by him, we also commit our lives to the same faith that he who lives in loyal obedience to his highest ideal, committing himself and his work to the power of the good-will, be the outward results of his life small or great, is serving his generation in the best and noblest way. In the name of our University whose motto is Veritas, and whose Memorial Hall commemorates the high worth of men who sacrificed brilliant promise of long usefulness for the sake of a principle in which they believed, and in the name of Jesus Christ, Teacher of the way of life and best symbol of our purest hope and noblest effort, let us silently pledge ourselves this day to the Christian life, the life of purity and good-will; so shall we live happily and usefully, manifesting and educating here the supreme power of the age to come, and entering into the peace and joy of Him whose good-will is the life and law of all ages — God, blessed forevermore.

BACCALAUREATE HYMN

BY W. K. RAINSFORD

TUNE : "Lead Us, O Father."

O, ALMA MATER, we who through thy halls
  Heedless have wandered as our ways befell,
Seeing too closely but thy sombre walls,
  Pause on the threshold ere we say farewell.

Noble the army who before us came;
  Countless the future pressing ever on;
And we a little while have borne thy name —
  Oh, bless us now before we too have gone!

Memories have gathered round thee year by year,
  Sweet as the springtime, sacred as the tomb;
Fain would we now, who may not serve thee here,
  Build thee an altar of the years to come.

Here though life's current pass one headland by,
  Strong is our youth, O God, to serve thee still;
Ere yet the last great ocean draweth nigh,
  Help us more nobly, Lord, to do thy will.

Serving thee bravely midst a world of men,
  Truthfully seeking till thy truth we see,
Steadfastly striving till the last Amen
  Peals through the morning of Eternity.

CLASS ORATION

BY ARTHUR ATWOOD BALLANTINE

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN AND CLASSMATES: Among all the influences that have touched us at Harvard, one has been preëminent. It is something more definite than the general atmosphere of learning and culture in classic Cambridge; something more universal than any series of facts taught us in our courses. It is an influence singularly appropriate at an American university, yet it differs in some respects from that of any other college in the country. This influence is that for absolute freedom of thought and action.

Here we have been free. Control from college authorities has meant little more than amiable advice from smiling deans. The loafer has conducted his researches in geology and developed the pleasing arts of idleness; the more laborious have taken "English 2" and tried for the Crimson. The "grind" has roamed at will among the forests of learning under the glass roofs of Gore Hall, while the "sport" has studied — Boston. The athlete has been glorious in the Stadium; the early and earnest have found their peace in Appleton chapel. Nothing has tended to repress individual tastes and powers; everything has helped to draw them out — to "educate" them, in the true sense. In every field of action we have been made aware of opposing ideals and tendencies; in every field of learning of conflicts of authority. The one thing we have been taught not to tolerate is intolerance. The spirit of freedom is the Harvard spirit.

Harvard is the eldest of American colleges and universities. Her first honorary doctorate of laws was conferred on George Washington; Massachusetts Hall was already old when the lead from its roof was used to make bullets for the soldiers in the Revolution. Two hundred and sixty-eight years has Harvard lived, and in every one of those years she has stood, not simply for learning, but for more than learning — for freedom of thought.

It was a struggle for such liberty that gave origin to New England. As we were taught in childhood, and have not entirely forgotten since, it was to be free in thought and worship that our Puritan forefathers left their comfortable homes in "merrie England," weathered the Atlantic in little wooden boats, and settled in wilderness.

Six years after these forefathers of ours had founded Boston they did something without parallel in history. While yet they numbered but a few thousand persons, scattered thinly from Ipswich to Cohasset, and from Watertown to Boston, while still in danger of starvation and, as one chronicler puts it, "of rattlesnakes by day and of savages by night," they founded a seminary of learning. In other lands and other times it has been after the struggle for bare existence had ceased, after the material wants of the community were well satisfied, that men have turned to the promotion of learning. But to our ancestors the intellectual was as necessary as the material. They were determined that the culture of the mind should begin with the culture of the soil. The college they thus founded was Harvard.

That Harvard represented any genuine freedom of thought in those stern Puritan days is remarkable. Her founders were men whose chief concern was religion. Even their state was a religious institution: in the language of John Cotton "Civil government in Massachusetts was not concerned about the things of man, but about the true worship and service of God." And the religion which thus dominated was of a most dogmatic and exclusive sort. It has been well said that the Puritans wished to be free to worship as they liked and to compel all others to do the same. By such men was Harvard founded — founded for the education of ministers of the gospel. Yet the charter of 1650, which still gives the college its legal existence, contains not one shackle of creed, sect, or opinion. The stated object of Harvard was not to teach any particular religious opinions, but simply "to improve students in piety, learning, and morality."

In spite of this liberal charter, the freedom of thought which the early college represented was but comparative. So long as church and state were practically the same, — and college and state were so closely connected that Commencement Day was a state holiday, on which the Cambridge common was made to resemble the grounds of a county fair, — so long the Puritan spirit of the state largely controlled the college. The first President, the Reverend Henry Dunster, a large-hearted and learned divine who served the college with might and main on a mere pittance of a salary, part paid in permission to collect the Cambridge taxes, part in corn and hay, but mostly not paid at all — was turned out of office because of doubts as to the true form of baptism. Yet even here the college was more liberal than the state. She tolerated President Dunster's heresy till the officers of state had him indicted by a grand jury "for disturbing the ordinance of Infant Baptism in the Cambridge Church."

The course of study laid out by the Puritan founders was scarcely calculated to drill the student in the exercise of individual taste and judgment. No choice was allowed the scholar in his studies. For over a century the students were forbidden to use their mother tongue at college and compelled to speak Latin. Imagine a Latin conversation in Memorial Hall to-day: most of us would starve if we could get our dinner only by asking in the tongue of Cicero.

In those early days, furthermore, the hand of discipline was heavier than it is now. Indeed it was frequently weighted with a switch. We read in the corporation records for 1674, for example, of a student who was condemned to be publicly whipped for speaking wicked words. This sentence was summarily executed in the library before all the students and officers of government. The offender knelt, the president offered prayer, administered the thrashing, and then closed the solemnities by another prayer. Under such penalties the college authorities regulated the conduct of each student, compelling him among other things to eat at the college commons. What this requirement meant may be inferred from a vote of the corporation in 1750 "that the quantity of commons be as hath been usual: two sizes of bread in the morning; at dinner one pound of meat with sufficient sauce and half a pint of beer; at night a part pie and a pint of beer."

Even with these restrictions the religious and intellectual atmosphere was freer at Harvard than anywhere else in New England. Harvard was more congenial to the doubter, the questioner, the man with an idea. Indeed it is in this fact that we find the reason for such an important event as the founding of Yale. About the year 1700 certain men of great conservatism became convinced that Harvard was too liberal, and so in their own phrase they "went to New Haven, Connecticut, to found a more orthodox School of Prophets." Other persons were moved to become benefactors of Harvard chiefly by what they termed her "free and catholic spirit." That spirit was manifested in a way quite unmistakable by many an early graduate, by an Otis, a Hancock, or a Samuel Adams.

Yet Harvard, while she has always stood for a large measure of intellectual liberty, has undergone a change — a change from comparative to nearly absolute freedom. This change is due largely to the more rational spirit of the age. Nations unlike persons, grow broader with age. Religion is no longer the sole concern of our politicians; furious Congregationalists no longer drive out Baptists. Enormous advances in science have had a rationalizing and liberalizing effect on men the world over. Yet at certain other ancient universities of England and America the change in the spirit of the age has brought forth little corresponding change in the spirit of the university. Oxford, which is to educate our Rhodes scholars, offers very nearly the same sort of education she gave even before Columbus discovered America.

That the change could work itself out fully at Harvard has been due chiefly to a number of great leaders. It was due in part to the most stimulating of Harvard's preachers — Ralph Waldo Emerson — who taught and sang with matchless eloquence the divine right of each individual to his own thought and choice. It has been due in some measure to such men as that winning gentleman of the old school, Professor Norton, who became at Harvard the first Professor of art in any modern university, and has taught by singular beauty of life and speech the value of education which embraces the fine arts. But most of all has it been due to the greatest of Harvard's presidents. It was he who found the religious atmosphere of Harvard somewhat partisan, and made it free; who found the course of study prescribed, and made it elective; who found Harvard not much more than a small college, and made it a mighty university; who has taught through thirty-five years of splendid service, often in the face of opposition and prejudice, that the chief object of the University is not to store the individual with facts or opinions, but to awaken in him capacity for independent thought and life. He who has performed this service for freedom at Harvard is the man whom we of 1904 have come to know, admire, and love as our president — President Eliot.

The freedom, so fully attained here under such leadership, has manifold value. Its meaning to us, however, has not been its usual meaning to the world. Were we Martin Luthers or Galileos, burning to teach new truths, we should be keenly conscious of the evils of ages when the favorite method of replying to your individual views was by cutting off your head or burning you alive. Were we Voltaires or Mills, we should say that the chief value of complete toleration, such as Harvard represents, is that it enables the world's thinkers to live without the discouragements and discomforts of martyrdom. But most of us are not Luthers or Galileos; we have not — as our instructors will testify — utilized our exceptional freedom in making material contributions to the world's thought. We have indeed profited richly by the freedom of others; but for us its immediate significance has lain elsewhere.

It has meant that the intellectual world has been made more real to us. In our study we have not been under that compulsion so apt to turn learning into drudgery. Those of us who have preferred to live in the present have not been compelled to spend time on thoughts antiquated and unreal — on Greek syntax and differential calculus; we have been free to learn modern thoughts of evolution, of literature, of economics. Our learning, suited to our individual tastes, is not something that falls from us after our last examination, but rather a real and growing part of our lives.

Still more significant is the strength of judgment which has come with our opportunity to make our own mistakes — the ability to stand firmly on our own feet in a real and puzzling world.

Most important of all is the fact that freedom has tended to teach us to view men, things, and events with perpetual freshness. If a man accepts the judgment of others or of tradition, if he admires Kipling or the Bible, the opera or football, because others admire it, it has no real meaning for him. He lives in a dull, second-hand world — for him "there is nothing new under the sun." It is he who thinks with perfect freedom, who questions all and feels all, that finds the world not settled, explored, and tiresome, but new, mysterious, enchanting. He feels as the old navigators must have felt when they saw before them the waves of unexplored seas.

Just here we have the essence of what is often spoken of as "Harvard Culture." Many people suppose that this is typified by men with sharply creased "twousahs" who discuss "the aht of Wobut Bwowning." Such people are mistaken. True, we do recognize here that there may be genuine worth in the man who is familiar with Browning and whose clothes fit. But our university teaches that the culture is not a veneer of fact and fashion, but a temper. And the essential part of it is openness, eagerness to see in new lights, willingness to form new estimates. It is this spirit that makes a man an individual — a poet, a thinker, an inventor. It is this that makes the literature and art which our university teaches eternally new, that makes life for which one prepares eternally interesting. It is, indeed, this that makes our university herself, with her noble traditions and beautiful precincts, every day more significant. This is that real love of truth, that sincere hatred of sham, sometimes ignorantly called "Harvard indifference."

Harvard has not given us this spirit of freedom solely for our own enlargement. Another lesson was taught by the Puritans who took from the slender resources of their struggling commonwealth to found the college, and by that elevated divine and scholar without whose munificence the college could not have existed, and whose name she bears. It has since been learned and taught by hundreds of Harvard men who have given to their university, their country, and their race, lives of devoted toil. This lesson is the lesson of service; our freedom must be made a means of service.

We shall have abundant opportunity. Some, catching a bit of the spirit of our brothers Phillips, Sumner, and Roosevelt, will find their chance in the field of politics and social reform. Others, perhaps, following Lowell and Thoreau, may help to lift American literature back to that high plane to which it was once led by a Cambridge group.

Wherever we serve, the message of this ancient university is clear: we are to stand for absolute freedom of thought. Here we encounter a custom sanctioned by the usage of centuries; ours may be the task of showing it wrong. The eager reformer bursts forth glowing with enthusiasm for a plan which is to clean city politics or uplift the masses; ours is the duty of weighing his scheme and showing its real strength or weakness. Accepting and rejecting nothing on account of prejudice, putting aside those petty bickerings which so galled the great soul of Emerson, we are ever to fight for simplicity, for toleration, for truth. In this fight we shall make enemies, we shall be condemned by the ardent and the hasty. But we shall meet their reprobation gladly, knowing that in standing for truth in service we are acting, as best we can, those feelings for Harvard which we can never put into words.

CLASS POEM

BY ARTHUR DAVISON FICKE

MOTHER of men and of men's deep dreams,
Whose eyes are tender with smiles and tears,
Watching the flow of the twining streams, —
The foamless streams of the flowing years,
To thee we bring, as we depart,
The love of the silent, earnest heart.

It is not for us, like a bard that sings
Some pleasant song, to give thee praise.
Thy glory is woven of sterner things,
Of straining nights and relentless days
Wherein our fathers, strong with fate,
Worked in the dark to make thee great.

Thy song is sung by men whose hands
Have wrought thee glory with painful toil;
Who have changed the face of the earth's wide lands,
Who have cleared the forest and stirred the soil,
And lit a light where was none before,
And brought new dreams from an unknown shore.

They have wrought with the strength of their eager blood
Past the old confines to the things beyond.
They have moved in a greater brotherhood
Than even that of thy well-loved bond.
And the names of the deathless mighty dead
Are heard wherever thy name is said.

We too are of thee as they were of thee;
We feel thy touch which none can name,
Whose strength is round the hearts that love thee,
And leaves no one of them the same;
Which brings the spark of a lasting fire
And lights the eyes with a high desire.

For here within thy quiet halls
Is space where boys can dream the long
Far dreams that work some miracles
To make them men, clear-eyed and strong,
With pulses beating to go forth
Into the world and try their worth.

Shall we bring songs, then, and pleasant flowers,
We of the day that has just begun?
Nay, rather wait for the far-off hours
When space of labor shall be done;
And, as we turn, we will hail thee then,
Mother of men's dreams, Mother of men.

IVY ORATION

BY WALTER RUSSELL BOWIE

SERIOUS-MINDED AUDITORS AND LIGHT-MINDED FRIENDS: In this classic arena we are met, supposedly, to make a Roman holiday. A Roman holiday is an occasion which is very tragic to the performers, but is thought to be amusing to the spectators. As a matter of fact, our holiday is not of that kind. It is more like a Sunday-School picnic — a long journey into the country with exceedingly scant refreshments served to people sitting on very uncomfortable seats.

But, oh, for the poetic soul to picture what this occasion might have been! We might have had a triumphal progress from the Square, with the President charioted in John the Orangeman's cart, and the Dean and Mr. Cram attending as lictors to keep Radcliffe from running away. Radcliffe is John the Orangeman's donkey, so named because she moves exclusively in the paths of learning. Imagine the first marshal, clad in a myrtle wreath and a toga, followed by the Pierian Glee Club singing pæans, and a well-trained band from the Junior class lustily blowing its own horns. The Republican Club might have come mounted on an elephant, while the Masonic Club was skilfully riding the goat. All classes might have been represented. English 2 might have represented the working classes, and Geology 4 the classes that toil not, neither do they spin, — for obliging tutors take care of the toiling, and the spinning occurs only in the instructor's yarns.

Once the Stadium had been reached, picture the games this arena might have witnessed. With a keg of beer for a prize, there might have been a chariot race between the Advocate, drawn by Pegasus and a thirst to conquer, and the Lampoon, drawn by a laughing hyena and a conquering thirst. Consider how we might have had here the high trapeze flights of the poet, and a balloon ascension by the orator, with his own soaring phrases furnishing the hot air. But the orator and the poet have shuffled their cards together in Sanders Theatre, and left the joker out. They want to be taken seriously, and they were taken seriously. They were taken with a prayer before and an ode afterwards, and exercises like that are manifestly no joke. The ode is a powerful narcotic, and a strong antidote to the awakening appeals of the orator and the poet. Alas, that we cannot have an ode here this afternoon! Now the ivy oration must be undergone without anæsthetics.

It would be interesting to know what impression Harvard has made upon our families to-day — for, presumably, at least all the beauteous and blushing part of the audience here assembled would be claimed by some member of 1904 as his family, either present or future. You have probably been impressed by all these serious young men in black gowns. They are serious because they are thinking how hard it will be to be worthy of their high calling, and how much harder to be worth their bread and butter. Their footprints on the sands of time have led them to the jumping-off place, and they are wondering where they are going to land next. How mournfully we may sing in the words of the poet: —

> "Alas, that they who kept our world in awe
> Must sweep up dusty offices of law,
> And live on five a month, and sleep on straw!"

Many of these young men are very wise. Some of the wisest ones will write Greek text-books, the medium wise ones will go into business and write checks, and the rest will become instructors in Economics 1. Some of the class are very brave. Many have played football, and the bravest have lived in the Yard. Some have been drawn into social prominence, and others have drawn blanks. Some have made merry, and some have made clubs. To make a club is an idiom — that is to say, it is a thing that cannot be explained by rational rules. Attaining to one is a good deal like a telegraph message — whether you get there or not depends chiefly on the state of your wires. If you make good connections, you will be rushed through early; but, without connections, you are likely to be hung up on the line and delivered so long after dark that nobody is awake to answer the bell. And apropos of connections, we may as well remember that not only in college but in the world outside the Yard fence two of a kind will always beat an ace, and a little man with a good friend, like a skiff with two oars, will generally move faster than a big boat with only one paddle.

Many of our visitors have doubtless heard of Harvard indifference. Harvard indifference is like the old Yard pump — a tradition long since blown up. We have grown horribly strenuous. Nowadays the incoming Freshman must go through the entire catalogue to discover what courses are best adapted to his peculiar bent, and when he gets through he finds himself so thoroughly twisted that any one bent is difficult to determine. Next he must decide whether to work for his degree in three years, or not to work, and take it in four. But before he can think this over he is visited by the athletic subscription agent.

The athletic subscription agent is a cross between a revivalist and a book agent, for he gives you a sermon on duty before he takes up the collection, and he differs from the book agent only in this — that the book agent takes a great deal and leaves you something, but the athletic agent takes everything and leaves you nothing, except a sadder and a miser man. He illustrates the old proverb: Whoever is worth doing, is worth doing well. The theory in athletic subscriptions is, that, where your treasure is there will your heart be also, and that many a man will take an interest in athletics after he himself and all his interest and most of his principal have been taken in by the athletic subscription agent. The Freshman is converted. He learns that athletics is the chief end of man, and that if his studies are killed thereby, the end justifies the remains. He learns that he must sing "Hard Luck for Poor Old Eli" when Amherst scores a touchdown, and he learns the reason why football practice must be kept secret. For, to go from bad to verse: —

> "Who would not weep to see that gory field,
> Where callous doctors mend the battered brave,
> To see the half-back down, ten-deep, and know
> His path of glory led but to the grave!"

Football resembles bridge-whist. It may have been a game once, but now it is a serious encounter in which you are bullied, battered, and frequently skinned.

Let us not, however, decry too far the strenuousness of our modern athletics. Think of the intellectual training. Take, for instance, the modern athletic detectives, who can smell out ineligibility as a Yard squirrel does a nut, and dig it up no matter how long it has been buried. They can convict a man of professionalism before breakfast, and think up grounds enough to disqualify a whole team in the course of an afternoon's nap. But sometimes their ingenuity works in other ways. Our own crew needed a professionally trained coach, but did not want a real professional lest the people who profess to dislike professionalism should protest. Now, this was a more or less complex proposition, but observe the results of athletic diplomacy. The Athletic Committee found a graduate rowing expert of another college, and bringing him to Cambridge, announced that he came not to coach the crew, but to help solve the race problem. For the last two or three years about all that could have been said of the crew was, that, like Ivory Soap, it floats; but under the new régime it is going to be like the Democratic party, — a combination that has no leaders, — or like the floor mats in the Gymnasium, — something that no one ever beats.

We have found college like a canoe, — hard to get into and sometimes hard to stay in. Memorial Hall and University 4 have conspired to thin our ranks, and some have fallen by the wayside, where examinations sprang up and choked them. All college officers are heathen. According to the Bible, Adam and Eve were driven out of Paradise because they insisted on eating from the tree of knowledge, but nowadays a man is driven out because he religiously refuses to eat thereof.

The remnant of us have survived History 1, the Recorder and the coal famine, and all except the men with heart trouble will survive Class Day. We are old and very experienced. We have learned that time and term-bills wait for no man, but a Crimson candidate and a book agent will wait forever. From the waiters in the Union café we have acquired the text: He that endureth to the end shall be served. We have learned that with the undergraduate band-wagon a man may not expect to pull through unless he is willing now and then to get out and push. We wish the football team had had more push last November, and we hope next week the crew is going to have a great deal of pull. We are so wise that we can almost tell the different club hat-bands apart. And how fresh in our minds is the memory of those proud days in Freshman year when we first invested our crowns with those eloquent ribbons — hung them out to the notice of upper-class clubs like Sawin's Express flags, — to signify "package to be called for within!"

This has been a wonderful year. President Eliot celebrated our Senior year by having his seventieth birthday, and we celebrated it ourselves by having a picnic. Contrary to custom, the picnic neither went to Misery Island nor otherwise came to grief. How touchingly the poet might have celebrated that day: —

> "Hark, how Nantasket's swarming shore resounds
> From loop-the-loops to rock-ribbed baseball grounds,
> Where fat men now prepare to drub the thin
> And end the game less fat than they begin;
> Or, hear that shout arise, since all now see > Those fateful clams and lobsters, which will be > Eternally remembered — who can tell?
> Internally, they were remembered well."

It was on the way home from Nantasket that several members of the class learned the meaning of the phrase, "the sad, sea waves." They were glad when they stepped again on terra firma — "less terror and much firmer."

How remarkably the college has grown since we took hold of it! The Union has come in our time. It has been like the Dean's black hat — a wide-spreading roof which shelters smiles and general good-fellowship. The Stadium also has come in our time. The Athletic Committee proposes to finish paying for the Stadium by withdrawing support from some of the athletic teams. The Committee is like a man who could not buy any dinner for his family because he had spent all his money on Dresden china plates to eat it from.

In spite of the glacial epoch last winter, we have had a very healthy time. That is because Dr. Bailey told us to wear rubbers, and the Crimson told the Bursar to put down board walks. To be sure, we have gotten mumps and measles, but then our shepherd of University 4 is going to get something more serious than measles and mumps. He is going to get married. No more shall we see that Pickwickian smile beaming across the Yard to Hollis 7. Who now will serve as our living example that a man may live in the Yard and still increase in mind and body? We are afraid the Dean has a great deal of the old Adam in him. It took a whole college of women to capture our former Dean, but Dean Hurlbut has succumbed to only one.

We wish we had somebody to succumb to. We need consolation now that we are going to leave Harvard.

Four years we have lived here beside the springs of learning. Some of us have drunk deep, but most of us have found our dippers had a hole in the bottom. We might have been more studious. We could not have been more happy. Through play and work we have moved together, and have known the superb esprit de corps that binds many men of many kinds by the one tie of common friendship and common ideals. We rejoice that, though we shall not dwell again together, the glad fellowship of these years will keep us members one of another and of Harvard.

ODE

BY SAMUEL A. WELLDON

How careless we came to thy permanent home,
How thoughtlessly entered thy life, —
So inconstant, and fond with the follies of youth,
With trifling and vanities rife.
Though our thoughts were caprice, we were welcomed by thee,
To thy cloisters' perennial peace;
The spell of tradition was over these walks,
And thy strength bade mutation to cease.

Still careless we 've lived in thy permanent home;
Thy cycle has turned since we came.
The years cannot alter thy vigor and truth,
But our hearts are no longer the same.
And lo, at the end, what thine influence wrought,
With what power thy purpose could bless,
What maturity, Harvard, thy scope could impart,
Our poor hearts in amazement confess.

LATIN ORATION

DE OMNIUM STUDIORUM UTILITATE

BY FRANCIS HOWARD FOBES

FAVETE linguis!

Omnibus huc in theatrum academicum ad sollemnia nostra concelebranda collectis salutem dico.

Te, praeses praestantissime, studiorum omnium fautor adiutorque providentissime, — te primum saluto; et recte. Tuo enim ut dicitur Marte, quod nuper nobis tibi septuagenario gratulantibus confessus es, ut studia quaedam adhuc neglecta colerentur usque laborasti dum providentiam tuam suspexerunt omnes; quippe cui persuaderi non potuit id quod pernicioso inducti errore asseveraverunt complures, — quaedam esse studia per se utilia, quaedam per se inutilia, — falsa quidem et inepta sententia. Tu nova introduxisti studia, vetera non neglexisti.

Tu quoque, qui civitatis huius Massachusettensis gubernaculo summa constantia adsidens honoribus tuis dignum te praebuisti, salveto.

Et te, regni parvi gloriae tamen avidissimi legatum praeclarissimum, — te cum civibus tuis adesse gaudemus. Patria tua artium liberalium semper appetens scientiam ad res efficiendas miro modo atque celerrimo adhibuit. Quod in periculis orientalibus alumni quidam Harvardiani sese perutiles praebuerunt eximio nos adficit honore.

Tu porro, senator illustrissime, rei publicae peritus, historiae Americanae narrator, salveto.

Necnon vos, socii et inspectores, qui studiis vetustioribus labantibus saepenumero succurristis, salvere iubeo.

Et vos, professores Harvardiani atque tutores, salvete. Tantis pro laboribus vestris, diversissimis quidem in rebus uno tamen consilio initis, gratias vobis quas habemus olim referamus. Quomodo autem referre oporteat indicavit nemo clarius quam vosmetipsi, qui viis multis eandem ad calcem decurrentes academiae simul atque rei publicae consuluistis. Suam enim quisque intendens viam, dummodo intendat, ad veritatem pervenit. Hoc quia nos docuistis gaudemus. Salvete atque valete.

Et vos, ecclesiarum pastores, studii honestissimi cuiusque fautores, plurimam accipite salutem.

Alumnos autem cunctos, salute dicta, et ea laetissima, hoc precor, ut, sicut haec academia studiis variis uno consilio rei publicae utilitatis causa vos coluit, ita vos honesta studia nulla contemnatis nec negotia quamvis ab usitatis diversa.

Patres matresque, ut filios praemio bene merito potientes spectetis congregati, vos praecipue oportet salutare quorum sine cura opibusque amore adhibitis haud facile huc fortunae advenissemus.

Nec vestri possumus oblivisci, puellae dulcissimae, forma lepida facieque candida venustae, quas si numquam quattuor per annos proximos visere nobis licuisset, studiorum nostrorum reconditorum atque difficillimorum cursum fere perpetuum nullo potuissemus modo perferre. Salvete ergo omnes; ut "valete" dicam, di prohibeant!

Vobis denique, condiscipuli dilecti, utinam hodie "valete" dicere necesse non esset! Diversissimas enim in partes brevi discedemus, consilio tamen coniungi licet, si modo unius rei meminerimus: neminem esse ob studium despiciendum, dummodo sit honestum. Enimvero quae bene facere possumus ea saepe minus studiis definiuntur quam consiliis. "Spiritus" enim "est qui vivificat"; studia "autem omnia operari potest unus atque idem Spiritus, dividens singulis prout vult." Atque singulis hominibus vita, factis, moribus comprobandi sunt studiorum delectus. Itaque, sodales carissimi, in alma matre amplificanda, in re publica honeste regenda coniuncti pro viribus constanter laboremus!

Salvete atque valete!

DISSERTATIONS

THE GUNPOWDER PLOT

BY JOHN J. ROGERS

WITH the death of Elizabeth of England in 1603 the glorious Tudor line came to an end. James of Scotland was crowned as her successor, but hardly a week had elapsed before he showed what an incomparable loss the land had suffered by the change of dynasty. He had been regarded by the Catholics of the realm as a second Messiah, whose advent would bring them immediate relief from persecution; they were doomed to disappointment. James showed no intention of indulging them in the least; but, on the contrary, enforced to some extent ancient laws against them. Catholics all over England were plunged into deepest gloom, and it is not surprising that many plots against James had their inception just at this time.

The use of gunpowder to avenge the Catholic wrongs probably occurred to a certain Robert Catesby about the middle of the year 1603. Although the "Gunpowder Plot," as it is called to-day, is connected in the minds of many with the fantastic tales of childhood, it was, at least as far as Catesby was concerned, perfectly logical in origin and development. His schemes of vengeance quickly took such shape in his mind that he confided them to three prominent Catholics of his acquaintance, Winter, Percy, and Wright. These men lent themselves heartily to his support, and they soon formulated a definite plan for blowing up the Houses of Parliament on the opening day of the king's second session, when James and all his court would be assembled. Further, the crown was to be bestowed upon some avowedly Catholic member of the House of Stuart and its return to the Papal fold to be assured.

The four men now realized the need of trustworthy allies. Winter was accordingly sent to Flanders for a Yorkshireman, Guy Fawkes by name, who for some years had been serving with credit in the low country wars. Being of an adventurous disposition, and withal an ardent Catholic, he was readily persuaded to join the plotters. The popular idea that he was the soul of the conspiracy is incorrect. In reality, he seems throughout to have been only a cat's-paw. Catesby was the backbone of the venture, and each of the twelve ultimately engaged was introduced to play a definite part. Fawkes, for example, was admitted for his known qualities of bravery and unswerving fidelity. The recommendation of extraordinary ability he certainly had not. It is noticeable that almost every one of the band had suffered for religion's sake in the reign of Elizabeth; all but one were gentlemen-born, and all seem to have been actuated by passionate zeal for their faith. Wrong they had endured stimulated them to action, it is true, but the action contemplated would contribute not a whit to their welfare. It was thus no scheme for personal advancement; the men had no other object than to set up in the place of James a more liberal monarch, and then sink back themselves into obscurity.

In May, 1604, Catesby and his original associates took a solemn oath of secrecy. Percy then secured a house in Westminster which conveniently adjoined the Parliament buildings. After some delay, owing to the unexpected prorogation of Parliament to the succeeding October, the men began, late in 1604, to dig a tunnel from their house under the Assembly Hall where the Lords were to sit. They soon encountered a wall nine feet thick and were proceeding very slowly, when one day they heard a rustling over their heads. Though apprehensive of discovery, they ascertained that the noise came from a coal cellar in another private house. As this cellar extended immediately beneath the Lords' Chamber, it was admirably suited to their purpose, and Percy at once took a lease of this house also. Their task being thus simplified, they proceeded to open a passage between their house and the coal cellar and placed therein twenty barrels of gunpowder. Fawkes, having acquired in the Netherlands some skill in such matters, directed this part of the undertaking, and cunningly masked the pile with wood-fagots.

After a short absence from London, Fawkes and Winter returned in September to substitute fresh powder for any that had grown damp. Parliament was now prorogued once more, this time until November 5th, so the men again left London for a time, to allay suspicion. Catesby had not been idle during these months, but found himself seriously embarrassed for money. He felt compelled, for this reason, to take into his confidence three Catholic gentlemen of property — Digby, Lakewood, and Tresham. With the swearing in of these three a dispute arose which ultimately defeated the whole plan. These men, even more than their fellows, had among the Lords many friends who would inevitably perish in an explosion such as was planned. Catesby and his supporters maintained that the few must be sacrificed to the welfare of the many. Tresham, on the other hand, urged that it was barbarous to destroy the just with the unjust. On October 26th, thoroughly disgusted at the scant attention paid to his opinions in the matter, he sent to his brother-in-law, Lord Monteagle, an anonymous letter urging him to absent himself from the opening of Parliament. The plotters were at once informed of their betrayal by Monteagle's secretary, but in spite of this warning determined to consummate the plot. Guard over the mine was maintained.

Monteagle promptly took the letter to Salisbury, James' chief minister. The King's Council, with singular sagacity, agreed that it probably referred to an attempt on the Lords to be made November 5th. The letter was then shown to James, who independently reached the same conclusion. The ministers pretended that he alone could have possessed such omniscience, and to the day of his death James' inflated sense of his own greatness was, partly at least, ascribable to this.

No official notice of the information was taken until the afternoon of November 4th, as Salisbury apparently feared a hoax, and dreaded ridicule. About three o'clock on that day the Earl of Suffolk and Monteagle strolled into the cellar where Fawkes had been left to guard the mine. While questioning him in an off-hand way, they caught a glimpse of a suspicious-looking pile and at once felt they were upon the scent. As Parliament was to assemble the next morning, no time could be lost. At eleven that night, Sir Thomas Knyvett with a strong guard went to the mysterious house. Fawkes, though realizing that all was lost, had remained at his post with rare heroism. Just outside the door he confronted Knyvett, answering his questions with perfect calmness. Knyvett, not deceived by his innocent demeanor, placed him under arrest, entered the house and found the powder. Fawkes defiantly exclaimed:

"If I had happened to be in this house when you took me, I would not have failed to blow you up, house, myself and all."

The children of England celebrate the fifth of November as "Guy Fawkes' Day." It was in reality the fourth when he displayed such splendid, though mistaken, devotion to his trust.

Fawkes, with eight others who had been captured in a mad flight from London, was placed on trial for high treason. All was prearranged; it is enough to say that it was a typical Coke trial. The accused had been forced to confess under torture and were promptly sentenced to death. On February 1, 1606, Fawkes, so horribly mangled by his torture that he could scarcely mount the execution ladder, met death with unshaken fortitude.

Catholic writers have recently convinced themselves that certain obscurities and contradictions in the old account justify its repudiation. Undoubtedly weak points do exist in the narrative; but any attempt to prove that the government, at the instigation of Salisbury, devised the plot for its own purposes is totally unwarranted. It is natural that Catholics should feel outraged at the strengthening of the King's position and the attendant weakness of their own by the discovery of the plot — and still more natural that they should attempt to show that Protestants and not Romanists were really responsible. As Gardiner has lately shown, the traditional story is nevertheless correct in its main points, and at worst Salisbury was guilty only of concealing for a time his knowledge of the plot.

The government failed signally in a furious attempt to implicate in the crime the order of Jesuits; but James' popularity with his subjects was vastly increased. In the eyes of his people, enraged at this attempt to exterminate the nobility of England at one blow, no punishment could be too cruel for any Catholic. Never in the whole Stuart period did a king receive such universal manifestations of loyalty.

And what shall we say of the twelve Catholics who thus died for their religion? Misguided fanatics, and cruel, they certainly were. But they showed a spirit of sacrifice, an almost pathetic aversion to personal advancement and a noble wish to ameliorate the condition of their co-religionists which, though displayed in the barbarous manner of their time, has upon it a gleam of ancient chivalry. Let us turn away with a touch of pity from the picture of poor, betrayed Guy Fawkes standing guard by his powder, waiting, sadly but resolutely, for the death which, for him, held no fear.

THE MILLIONAIRE IN POLITICS

BY FRED WAYNE CATLETT

To-day Harvard is sending out into the world some six hundred young men. Of these a few will be men of wealth. Doubtless all would like to be and, in their own opinion, should be millionaires. But time alone can tell the favored few, and as some of these are very likely to enter political fields, a consideration of the place which the millionaire occupies there cannot be untimely.

To appreciate to its full extent the position which the millionaire has already acquired in politics, we may study him for a moment where he is most typical — that is, in the United States Senate. Securely intrenched there, for all future time, so far as we can see, he wields a power undreamed of when our constitution was framed. For the system of checks and balances, the admiration of theorists, has been so shaken by time and the persevering aggression of the Upper House that at present a few are becoming alarmed at the so-called "overshadowing power of the Senate." By encroaching upon the presidential authority, and upon the power of the House, the Senate has in fact become the very centre of our legislative and political life.

This situation may or may not be desirable, but at any rate the responsibility for it does not rest upon the millionaire. Yet, though not responsible for the situation, the millionaire has seen how to take full advantage of it. With a keen appreciation of its possibilities, he has seized control of this legislative citadel which commands the whole field of political action. Though numbering but nineteen, he holds the chairmanships of seventeen out of the sixty-seven committees, and is well represented on all the others. And who is there, after observing the ability of our senators in filibustering and obstruction, who will deny that nineteen men can prevent the passage of any law or treaty, even in temporary opposition to the will of the country? Still the fault lies not with the millionaire who has grasped his opportunity, but with the legislative mechanism which created that opportunity.

Moreover, on the side of the millionaire, it may be said that his very presence in the Senate insures to our government the stability and conservatism so valuable in a republic. His wealth, too, although it is not necessarily a sign of preeminent ability, yet establishes at least a presumption that he is above the average. And, finally, this same wealth renders him freer than the poorer man from the temptation of bribery or fraud. Surely these are guarantees which even the idealist would desire in the upper House of a republic. When they are balanced against the mere fact that millionaires are the possessors of enormous wealth, we shall be compelled to conclude that their presence in our Senate, at least in the present limited degree, is not only not pregnant with future danger, but with good for all concerned.

Further, an analysis of the character of the millionaires in the Senate will both confirm us in this conclusion and give us the two leading characteristics of the millionaire in the whole of politics; for we find that the millionaires there are sharply divided into two classes: those who have inherited their wealth and those who have gained it by their own efforts. The former number three and the latter sixteen out of the possible nineteen members. And this situation, as I have said, is typical of the whole of political life, — that is, the man born rich generally shuns politics and scorns politics, while his energetic, ambitious, but less aristocratic self-made brother dives with zest into the dirty but still alluring political pool.

But the study of the millionaire in the Senate discloses still another important fact, which is true of politics in general. Not only are the large majority of our millionaires self-made men, but they are business men. Now, we have often been told that the business man is needed in politics; that we want his ability in organization, his skill in leadership, his experience in managing men. Mr. Lincoln Steffens, however, who has recently attracted wide attention by his fearless exposure of the corruption in our great cities, says that the "business man is the chief source of corruption, and it were a boon if he would neglect politics." But just nine lines before, he had remarked that "the typical American citizen is the business man." Therefore, his logic would drive us to the conclusion that the typical American should stay out of American politics — a conclusion too startling to be acceptable, but with too much foundation to be ignored.

It is to be remembered, however, that our question to-day is not quite so broad as this conclusion. We are concerned, not with all business men, but merely with millionaires — the highest evolution of the business man. Our question is, then, what are the possibilities of the millionaire for good or evil as regards the purity of our politics? In the very beginning we must credit him with the least likelihood of personal corruption. Possessed of great wealth, his interest is, in legal phraseology, released. He lacks the motive for peculation.

But he is subject to another temptation, common to all business men, and to the millionaire in the highest degree — a temptation which is even more dangerous to our political and national welfare, because its demoralizing effects are more widespread. It is this: Having discovered in the course of his business that many men have their price, he may practise in politics what is commonly known as business methods. This means that he will flood his district, state, or nation with money; he will buy over the worthy floating voter. He may even go so far as to proclaim openly a justification of this policy. Such action, however, should be universally condemned. He has not introduced into politics true business methods, but led astray by the desire for quick success, he has brought in illegitimate and dishonest business methods. So perhaps we should modify the well-known statement and say that what we need in politics is the honest business man with his legitimate business methods. This sort of millionaire business man is desirable and of him we cannot have too much.

Still, the danger which has been described is not drawn from imagination. It is only too real. It is illustrated in state politics by the deplorable conditions existing in two of our smallest states, and in national politics by the brilliant careers of several of our most successful politicians.

The evil, then, is present. It is folly to talk of excluding the typical American, the millionaire business man from politics. Even if we wished to do so, we could not avoid the evil thus: we must meet it squarely. On the one hand, we want his activity, his energy, and his tried ability in organization, leadership, and management of men; on the other hand, we do not want his dishonest business methods. But is he necessarily dishonest? Certainly not. In Boston (which is, to say the least, not notorious for its political rottenness), there are more than twice as many millionaires in proportion to the population as in St. Louis, Minneapolis, or Philadelphia, each one of which has earned a national reputation for corrupt municipal government.

The conclusion is evident. His temptation to corrupt is due not merely to his own innate crookedness, but to the willingness of the rank and file of the voters to be corrupted. To strike at the root of the evil then, we must reform the voter; we must give him a wholesale moral education to prevent his wholesale bribery. In this way we shall supply a remedy for the evil by building up that which is essential to every healthy state — a sound public opinion. In that alone shall we find the slow but sure cure for the political corruption, introduced by the business methods of the business man, and magnified by the vast resources of the millionaire. In that alone shall we find the restraint which will permit us fearlessly to employ in political fields the superior ability and training of the American millionaire.
